

Does Breast Size Really Count?, Strip Poker Uncovers the Truth

Thursday, 29 November 2007

Men are often rebuked by women as being shallow individuals, women tend to over simplify mens sexual cravings or needs be it may, down to two parts of the womens anatomy ... "big tits and a pussy". Of course any man would refute that claim and perhaps might find it a little offensive, although it may be true of any man or women for that matter, that sometimes our guard can drop, perhaps through the over indulgence of alcohol and the inevitable happens, the horrifying wake up to reality the morning after.

But all men are not equal right? Well it seems that recently a woman from Oxford, UK decided to take it upon herself to see just how shallow men really are, Clover Stroud who has 36A breasts had a pair of 36DD non-surgical silicone breasts affixed to her chest for a week to analyse the effect that it had on her daily life, you can read entire daily mail article here .

But did this article really prove anything? are men just attracted to a massive pair of tits? surely good looks, personality, intelligence, wit, equal interests come into play?

Let's face it a woman who isn't gifted in beauty, can have the biggest tits on earth and she isn't going to attract the mainstream male. The trial Ms Stroud conducted proved little of anything other than men might be more attracted or perhaps just curious of women with massive breasts, past surveys have concluded that the fullness of a woman's breasts and rounded hips are attractions to men, let's face those two items take up a lot of real estate on a woman's body right!

The internet is a good starting point, the absolute vastness of sex sites that exist today, the majority of which are to quench the male sexual appetite, niche websites that focus on a massive variety of fetishes to satisfy the desire and interest of both men and women.

How many times have we heard that a woman loves to see a well dressed man ... in a good pair of shoes! Now if we were to analyze that remark it could be said that women holds more value in clothes than the man himself ... of course any male that has had to endure shopping with a woman doesn't need to be reminded of a woman's need for a good pair of shoes, a handbag, the skirt or pants and not to forget the matching belt, let alone the makeup and accessories.

The truth of the matter is that both men and women are different both in their physical makeup and their sexual needs, men are visual creatures and physical beauty is an attraction, and just as every man has his own very unique sexual tastes, their primary reason for living can not be narrowed down to just a lovely set of DD breasts.