

Strip Poker Editor Gets Arrested!

Friday, 29 June 2007

Our in-house editor who has been trapped in a hot tourist spot in Central America (country excluded for security reasons) for close to six months, made a desperate attempt to flee the country by crossing into the neighbouring country illegally.

Our editor said; "It was a tough decision but I felt for the good of my families future I had to do whatever it took to ensure their safety and future lifestyle. Firstly I ensured my family crossed-borders safely and without incident and then I immediately made my move to cross the border where military and police presence was less intense. Now personally I hate spiders and snakes but I had to cross the border in a remote location, wading through swamps at waste level in the middle of the night was a creepy but necessary experience, there was a danger of becoming crocodile bait or being bitten by a snake, but the determination to see my family again was present with me the entire time. It was a difficult hike that was done on a rainy night without the aid of a compass".

Unfortunately our editor experience didn't end nicely, he was arrested by military some 12hrs later just 4 kms from his destination point where his wife and family was waiting. Our editor continues; "it was a very distressing time, to go so far and be caught in the final legs of the journey. I will continue to fight for my freedom and believe that one day I will return to my home-land and continue to write about my experiences so that people are aware of the dangers (especially for men) about visiting some Central American countries. There are many innocent men that are imprisoned here wrongly and/or sent home broke."

Until then; our editor is back on-board and will continue to express his sarcastic, negative and chauvinistic viewpoints.
